Despondency Thought to Have Impelled Delaplaine's Suicide. At the office of the New York Life

Insurance Company, Broadway and Leonard street, it was said this morning that James B. Delaplaine, the suicide, whose death by prussic acid in his room, at 17 West Thirty-second street, was fully reported in the Night street, was fully reported in the Night Edition of "The Evening World" yesterday, was a canvasser employed in the branch office at 3 Union square.

Delaplaine was employed by the Company as a canvasser in Washington, where he was well known. He left the Company without warning about a year ago, and nothing was heard from him until he appeared as a canvasser for the branch office in Union Square.

In this capacity he handled very little money, and his accounts are perfectly straight. He turned in very little business, however, and this probably made him despondent.
